The Indecisive Ones

The year 1960 has seen the downfall of two American political leaders, both very prominent in their parties and widely regarded as having presidential stature, but both of whom had the great flaw of not being able to make up their minds. Adlar Stevenson of the Democrats and Nelson Rockefeller of the Republicans went to their respective party conventions as reluctant candidates; at least that was the pose they assumed. Although both had and still have strong - even avid - support among important segments of their parties, neither really had a chance to be nominated once the delegates had as-

The contrast between these two men and the two who did win their party nominations is instructive. Neither John Kennedy nor Richard Nixon made any bones about the fact that they wanted very badly to be nominated, in fact each put into motion years before the event, smoothly operating machinery designed and built for one purpose only - the capture of the nomination.

Thus the public's attitude, as mirrored by that of the delegates to the conventions, is revealed as admiration and acceptance of the man who wants to be president and says so firmly and boldly, and rejection perhaps even some contempt - for the man who says he does not want to be president but who will run for the job if, in effect, enough people persuade him that he is indispensable.

We are not saying that the cases of Stevenson and Rockefeller are absolutely parallel. Stevenson was the true reluctant dragon; he kept saying that he was not a candidate but in such words that supporters Lke Eleanor Roosevelt could interpret as meaning the opposite. Furthermore, we are sure that Stevenson is enough of a realist to have realized that his two defeats as the Democratic standard-bearer made it highly unlikely that he would be picked again. Nevertheless there obviously re-

After the Conventions As the 1960 conventions go down in history and the flags, bunting, confetti, boos, cheers, disappointments and triumphs become memories, the Wisconsin delegations to both conventions can take credit and some comfort. They maintained their independence, their principles and dignity, and perhaps they are closer in touch with the hopes and ideals of the American people than the applauded representatives of either major party.

All Wisconsin politicians somehow feel they are descendants of the creators of the Wisconsin Idea with the emphasis upon the voice of the people expressed in party tickets and platforms. The Wisconsin Democrats, who call themselves liberals, and the Wisconsin Republicans, who are regarded as conservatives, are eons apart on issues, methods and means. But both groups this time were politely and effectively kicked in the teeth by the bigwigs of their party and the men for whom they had fought and campaigned.

Wisconsin Democrats who stand staunchly for civil rights, government aid to spur free enterprise and an emphasis upon the so-called common man saw the man to whom most of them were enthusiastically pledged pick Lyndon Johnson, the whipping boy of the liberals, as his running mate. In effect, they were told that they had no place else to go except the Democratic party and they didn't have to be wooed and won as did the southern conservative wing

And the Wisconsin Republicans who had fought so valiantly for Vice President Nixon when his status was challenged by a host of aspirants including the governor of New York, were ignored in their emphasis upon a reduction of unnecessary federal controls and a valve upon the spending sprees to buy votes.

mained in him a wistful hope that lightning might strike, and so he settled for the ambivalent position of saying he didn't want it, but of being willing to accept it if it were offered on a silver platter.

In the case of Gov. Rockefeller there is still room to believe that he knew what he was doing even though his actions mystified most of his fellow Republicans and a lot of other people too. The governor and his aides seem to be saying now that he really meant it when he pulled out of the race last winter, but continued to permit speculation about his possible candidacy as a tactical maneuver to force Vice President Nixon into taking a more Rockefeller-like position on a number of important issues. Even if we accept this explanation, however, the fact remains that his manner of operating left an impression of indecisiveness, an impression reinforced by the long and involved answers he gave to fairly simple direct questions in press and television

But more is involved here than mere political strategy. There are a number of qualities that the American people want in their president - intelligence, honesty both of the traditional kind and that which is described as "intellectual," personal warmth and the ability to exercise leadership Both Stevenson and Rockefeller have these qualities in considerable measure. But we think at this particular juncture of our history the American people are more deeply concerned than ever before about another quality in that office - the quality of decisiveness. In an era when a wrong decision, or even the absence of a needed decision, might bring down upon us a rain of thermonuclear explosives. when the failure of our government to move decisively at a critical moment can mean important defeats at the hands of our implacable enemy, the qualities of intellectuality so fully possessed by Stevenson or of personal warmth and sincerity as manifested by Rockefeller, have become relatively less important.

The delegates safely home, wiping away the grame and spittle and perhaps the tears, can acknowledge that this is politics. Both parties want desperately to win in November. Both know it will be a close and tough fight. The uncommitted votes in the middle must be primed and prodded, soothed and seduced. And the result is that there is such a small surface difference between the parties, their platforms and their candidates as we go into the fall campaign, that the confused voters must fall back upon personal prejudices, hair styles, type of wives, religions, relatives, or the guy whose hand they happened to shake.

Amazingly enough, whoever is elected in November, the nation will probably fare pretty well. Perhaps there is something in so watering down aims and ambitions with compromise that the extremes can't get hold.

But Wisconsin delegates to both conventions can remember this as the year when they were soundly licked for sticking to principle and refusing to admit that Madison avenue hucksters really had taken over the operation of the conventions. It may be that the shine and the glamour, the movie stars and the accord at the end is what the people want. But we suspect that the American's sense of justice and representation is hurting this summer.

There is something important lost in this attempt of both sides to be all things to all men Just as many voters may go to the polls because election day is exciting there are free rides and bake sales, and it's almost a holiday. But the enthusiasm, the dedication, the fighting down to the last ballot are things to be generated by the candidates themselves and there is evidence that they will make a lively race

The Presidential Debate

The three TV broadcasting chains have offered to make available eight hours of prime evening time for a debate between the candidates for president between Labor day and the election. Of course both appear eager to accept.

Many political observers believe the two strong tickets put up by the Republicans and the Democrats assure a very exciting election. The idea of a public debate certainly adds spice to the program.

It is highly desirable that the TV debate be carried out for the edification of ine public Every campaign develops disputes and disagreements. Each candidate will have supporters on the stump amplifying the central argument made by the candidates themselves. It certainly is to be expected that there will be misstatements of fact and accusations of unfairness and all of the other ordinary disagreements that go to enliven a presidential campaign. The public debate in which the candidates will meet each other face to face, so to speak, will provide opportunity for each to set the record straight as he sees it. It cannot help but be a valuable aid to public understanding

Apparently all that stands in the way of such an educational feature at the moment is Section 315 of the Communications. Act which requires radio and TV stations reaturing a candidate for office to grant equal time to all other candidates for the same office. The Senate has approved a change in the law and similar action now is pending before the House. It seems likely it will be quickly adopted when Congress resumes its sessions.

BY CHARLES JACOBSON ing a financial audit by the Madison - Since its of department of state audit and a management survey by the department of administration. Although the facts were clearly stated in the audit, some newspapers gave a confusing story. The audit also disclosed a problem regarding personal investments of an employe, which the board had already dealt with by asking for and receiving the employee's resignation No newspaper mention was made of the $1,369,000 earned on the short term investment account during the period audited, nor of the nearly $2 billion of transactions carefully planned to produce that income.

WRONG IMPRESSION

Many of the recommendations made in the management survey dealt with the financial and administrative matters which are not responsibilities of the Investment board.

Yet the casual reader would interpret some reports to mean, the investment hoard had been lax by making premature bank deposits of withheld federal taxes on state departments payroll - which are not a function of the Investment board

Journalistic efforts should always be carefully undertaken. They should be orderly and accurate particularly when dealing with a fiduciary branch of state government Specia cular stories which are factually incomplete, either confuse confidence. We business men in government appreciare the efforts of those papers where faithful report-

The oldest Volkswagen in America.

Found on a farm in Emerson, Nebraska: the oldest Volkswagen in America, Model year: 1945. Still working every day for its owner, Harold Kuhn, it offers proof that a Volkswagen may grow old, but never obsolete.

The oldest Volkswagen in America was driven 1.500 miles to VW headquarters in New Jersey. Averaged 22 mag on the way. There, it was placed side by side with the newest Volkswagen in America (the 500,000th to come over).

You can't see too many differences in the two VWs. The new one has: larger front and rear windows, heftier bumpers, new chrome strips and hub caps, different turn indicators. Otherwise, you might mistake the oldest Volkswagen for the newest,

If you took both cars apart, though, you'd find that almost every part has changed since '45, tMost new parts fit any older model.) Volkswagen keeps finding new ways to improve the VW to make it last even longer. Yet not one change in 15 years has made a Volkswagen obsolete. Volkswagens depreciate less than any other car.

Come in and see us for a new Volkswagen today. You'll be making a good long-term investment.

MERCEDES-BENZ ADDS A BREATH OF MAGIC TO YOUR MOTORING

Hiron to the star of Mercedes-Benz and realize a remarkable experience behind the wheel of an automobile. Driving becomes a new world of precision and control, The 'magic" of Mercedes-Benz lies in the advanced engineering of four wheel independent suspension, overhead camehaft engines, coach work of in percaple craftsmanship and design of classic integrity. And of course the faultless manner in which all the components are put together to make one peerless machine. Pictured here, is the all new 220SE already established as one of the world's great road cars having captured First, Second, Third, and Fifth at the 1960 Ralley Monte Carlo, acknowledged as the toughest test of all. We are fortunate to have this model in stock at the present time. Come in and see why we are so proud.

Non-Farm Boys Plan on College

with better school attendance -around 90 per cent of the college group had attended high school "regularly," as compared to around twothirds of the non - college

As a group, those who went on to college had better scores in the high school intelligence test, and had better school grades than the non-college group. But this doesn't mean that all students who were capable enough for college actually went or that all noncollege students had poor grade records in high school. In fact, the researchers warn that many capable high school boys do not go on for further

Sweet MUSIC to the experienced ear

the 7-foot 30 at work says a lot to the experienced combine man

You can tell by the steady hum of the cylinder of the 30 Combine that the crop is being fed positively and evenly —that the cylinder is running at proper speed — that there are no unthreshed heads going through buried deep in a bunch of straw.

You can tell by the quiet, unhurrled action of the separating and cleaning units that straw and grain are moving smoothly — that good work is being done in heavy spots as well as in light growths."

Ask Outagamie Equity for complete details on the 30 Combine. We'll be glad to come out and talk it over with you Our credit plan makes ownership easy.
